I. INTRODUCTION

The purpose of this guide is to facilitate the use of the Sarawak Gazette, a rich source for the scholar. Because of the haphazard methods of document preservation and the loss of most of the repositories for official papers and private libraries in Sarawak during World War II, the Sarawak Gazette is the most extensive single source of published material relating to the country during the reigns of the second and third Rajahs (1868-1941). Its practical value in research is further enhanced by the extreme difficulty in thoroughly examining relevant unpublished material scattered in archival accumulations in Sarawak, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Sarawak Gazette has rarely been extensively used in scholarly monographs and reports, primarily for two reasons. The annual indexes to the Sarawak Gazette which were published for approximately forty years beginning in 1887 are inadequate for most studies. Secondly, complete runs of the Sarawak Gazette are rare. For example, as of the time of this writing (summer, 1966) only one complete run is available in the United States - at the East West Center Library, University of Hawaii, Honolulu. As a result of this neglect in examining thoroughly the Sarawak

Gazette, it will still yield valuable supplementary information in a number of fields of study.

In the years since World War II, in addition to publishing a wealth of original articles, the Gazette has provided a valuable supplement to the daily Sarawak Tribune and the Sarawak Information Service's Sarawak by the Week.

The research value of the Sarawak Gazette may be better appreciated if we review briefly some of the material it contains in relation to selected fields of study.

Contribution to various fields of study.

First of all the Sarawak Gazette is a historical source. It contains more material by and about the second Rajah, Sir Charles Anthoni Johnson Brooke, than is elsewhere published. A biography of Rajah Charles, by far the strongest of the three white rajahs, has yet to be undertaken. The material in the Sarawak Gazette shows him to be one of the most enlightened rulers in Southeast Asia instead of the eccentric misanthrope he has been sometimes painted. Brunei misrule and her relations with Sarawak are extensively covered, especially during the period, 1870-1906. The nature of the Rajah's hostility to the British North Borneo experiment in the decade following 1878 is better explained in the Gazette's pages than in any source on North Borneo. The Sarawak Gazette is perhaps the only source of material critical of the Christian missions in Sarawak, especially the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts. It is by far the best source for the study of several specific aspects of or events in Sarawak's history, such as slavery and the Anglo-American experiment at Goebilt. Often as not, its obituaries and other personal sketches contain historical material which would otherwise be lost. Finally, its annual summaries, which began in 1871, and the current monthly chronology provide an excellent historical sketch.

Students of government or administration will find the Sarawak Gazette to be the only published source of the outstation reports, the "minutes" of the pre-World War II Council Negri (General Council), Committee of Administration, Supreme Council and Kuching (the capital) Municipal Council and many of the departmental reports. Many of the laws of Sarawak relating to the full spectrum of administrative affairs are found only in these "minutes." Much of Sarawak law prior to 1908 was published in the Sarawak Gazette in the form of notices, orders and proclamations. Although certain of these have been republished, many were not.

Addresses by the Rajahs, the Governors and other officers before the Council Negri, the Kuching Municipal Council, various conferences, such as the local authority conference, and the courts frequently provide concise statements of government policy.

During most of the first thirty-eight years of its publication appointments, leaves, retirements and dismissals were published. After 1908 this information was published much more systematically in the Sarawak Government Gazette. Position and salary information was published as notices and orders.

The growth of public works and governmental services during the Brooke period is covered in more detail here than in any other source. Reports by colonial civil servants since World War II have frequently shown the Brookes to have been shamefully neglectful in providing social services, implying or stating explicitly that "Brooke policy" forbade this on any meaningful scale. An examination of the Sarawak Gazette during the Brooke period reveals "Brooke policy" to have been nearly the opposite of what these later critics maintain.

In the past decade the "at your service" feature of the paper has provided a useful series on the various government departments and services, usually written by the officer in charge. In addition, the coverage of the growth of community development during this period has been exceptionally thorough.

However, the Sarawak Gazette is a poor source of material relating to political controversy within Sarawak. While the Sarawak Tribune is a much better source in this respect, the Sarawak Gazette often treats well the non-political aspects of issues. For example, its coverage of the Indonesian confrontation on Sarawak's borders is remarkable in its restraint, and concentrates its attention on describing the vicissitudes of the British, Malayan and local units involved and the border villages.

Economists tracing trade patterns will welcome the coasting and foreign trade returns and the reports from the Trade Department and the Post, Shipping and Customs Office. These and the Kuching market price lists yield commodity price information over long periods. Estimates and statements of revenue and expenditures, the reports of the Treasury Department and the wealth of information on the "farms" reveal how the Brooke government financed its operations, and are helpful in charting Sarawak's economic development.¹

Students of agriculture and agricultural economists are particularly fortunate. Here they will find a sizable literature on the cultivation, pathology and production of the major "crops" during this period, gambier, rubber, sago and pepper. Here too are the reports from the several government and private estates and experimental farms where such products as tobacco, coffee, tea, pineapple and arrowroot were tried.

The literature on forestry in Sarawak shows a deeper awareness of the material in the Sarawak Gazette than do most fields. However, there is a good deal of material relating to jungle gathering and the extraction of forest products prior to 1919, when the Forest Department was established, that has not found its way into other studies.

Perhaps no field in Sarawak has been as carefully surveyed by highly trained personnel as geology. The exploration and exploitation of mineral resources has been so important that Brooke history may be divided into the periods of antimony, mercury, gold and oil production. The Sarawak Gazette is the best single source on mineral production during the Brooke period. For the post-Brooke period the best source is the publications of the Geological Survey. In connection with early searches for minerals, explorations into the hinterlands of Sarawak were made. The accounts and journals of these trips are frequently our only contemporary descriptions of places which later achieved economic or other importance. The Sarawak Gazette faithfully published these. Comparatively few were published elsewhere. The Gazette is indispensable to those studying Sarawak's production of these minerals.

Anthropological studies during the past two decades have frequently resulted in publications whose titles suggest the comprehension of an entire ethnic group, but which are in fact studies of one or a few small communities. A detailed survey of known anthropological information about Sarawak has not been undertaken since 1896.² Sarawak has not been as extensively studied in this respect as a survey of the titles of its anthropological literature might lead one to believe. The Sarawak Gazette is a mine of information on such subjects as ethnographic descriptions of little known, and in at least one case extinct groups; folklore, including stories of ethnic origins; migrations, such as that of the Iban and the exodus of Brunei subjects during the nineteenth century; and native arts and crafts and language. In this respect the Sarawak Gazette is an essential supplement of the Sarawak Museum reports and the Sarawak Museum Journal. Immigrant and expatriate communities, the Chinese, Europeans and Indians, were well-reported. The paper contains material on the Chinese which other studies have ignored, and may be the best English-language source on this group. The expatriate European community, preponderantly British, has never been adequately studied, despite the fact that their lives and customs have been the subject with which the Sarawak Gazette was most preoccupied. The Indians have been all but overlooked in histories on Sarawak, even though for several years under the second Rajah there was an Indian Immigration Department whose reports were regularly published in this source. Our anthropological knowledge has been broadened by the archaeological research undertaken in Sarawak, particularly during the past dozen years by Mr. Tom Harrisson. Although the Gazette is not the richest source in this respect, its contributions are invaluable in rounding out our information on some of the most important sites in Southeast Asia.

Those interested in Sarawak's social services will find here the richest single source on medicine in Sarawak, and with the possible exception of the Hammond Report,³ the best source on education under the Brookes. Reports from and articles on the various social, fraternal and welfare institutions contain much which does not appear in separately published annual departmental reports.

Comparative sources.

The 1300 issues of the Sarawak Gazette are neither a handy introduction to the country nor the best means of keeping abreast of the news. An introduction to Sarawak adequate for most persons may be more readily obtained by consulting any of the recent Sarawak annual reports published by the Colonial Office, Hepburn's Handbook of Sarawak, Roe's Natural Resources of Sarawak and Runciman's The White Rajahs.⁴ The Sarawak Tribune, published in Kuching since 1945, is a better source for current events.

Although the Gazette contains a great deal of material relating to Sarawak's relations with other countries, it is on the whole a poor source for this type of information. Much better material may be found in Foreign Office file No. 12 (Borneo), the various Colonial Office files for British North Borneo, Brunei, Labuan and the Straits Settlements and the second Rajah's letter books in the Sarawak Museum. Qualitatively it is important to compare the circumspect language of the Gazette with the many vituperative letters and memoranda in these archival sources.

A person undertaking the study of Christian missions in Sarawak would do well to remember that while the Gazette is a moderately useful source, the bulk of the relevant material is either archival or in widely scattered and rather obscure periodicals such as the B.E.M. Newsletter.⁵

Finally, the researcher should for most subjects examine the holdings of the Sarawak Museum and, if possible, those of various government offices in Kuching. As yet no catalogue of these holdings has been published. Definitive research demands the thorough examination of archival material.

The Official purpose of the Sarawak Gazette.

On August 5, 1859, a news bulletin printed by the Sarawak Mission Press by authority of the government announced that "as false reports arise, it is requested that no reliance be placed on news that is not published by Authority."⁶ This initial effort at authentication and

This news bulletin was printed on a single sheet of paper, approximately five by seven inches in size. The mast-head said simply, "By authority of the Government." It has been reprinted in toto in the Sarawak Gazette, No. 1288 (June 30, 1965) p. 187.

verification of communications within Sarawak was followed eleven years later by the establishment of a government press with a second hand Albion press brought from England by the second Rajah.⁷ Shortly thereafter "informal editions" of the Sarawak Gazette were published, but only one, the June 27, 1870 issue of the Sarawak Government Gazette has survived.⁸

The Sarawak Gazette commenced regular publication on August 26, 1870. Its first editor, Reverend John Kemp, the government chaplain, was given considerable freedom in designing and editing the paper he founded.⁹ His first editorial was primarily a statement of the Sarawak Gazette's purpose.

This press is presently in the Sarawak Museum. Its photograph is published in Ibid., No. 1252 (June 30, 1962) opposite p. 130.

⁸R. Pringle, "Pieces from the Brooke past - XIV: proto-newspapers in Brooke Sarawak," No. 1288, op. cit., pp. 186-187, is the only published source relating to these earlier, "informal" issues. A single copy of the June 27, 1870 issue is in Foreign Office file 12 in the Public Record Office, London. It should not be confused with the Sarawak Government Gazette which commenced publication in 1908.

⁹Ibid., No. 69 (August 1, 1873) n.p. refers to John Kemp as "its originator, editor, manager, and principal writer."

The first number of the Sarawak Gazette is today published with a hope that it may both supply a want in the country, and be of service to those in other places who are interested in the prosperity of Sarawak and its dependencies. Its objects are thus of two kinds. In the first place it will endeavor to provide those Europeans who reside at Outstations with concise statements of official business and other matters of public interest in Sarawak, together with a summary of the latest intelligence obtained by telegram or newspaper from Europe. With this object in view, the Gazette will be published as soon as possible after the arrival of steamers carrying mails from Singapore. Its second object will be to serve as a recognized report of the conditions of the various residencies under the Sarawak Government, in their relations to the natives and to the trading interests which most of them possess, for circulation in other countries and settlements. Our columns will therefore be open to all Europeans who have information to give with respect to the social and political condition, the trade and general progress of the districts where they are stationed, or with respect to any matter of general interest in their neighborhood. Articles on the policy and foreign relations of the country may from time to time be expected, and any remarks which residents may have to offer on methods of cultivation, utilization of native labour and similar subjects will be received and inserted. As the Gazette is published with the distinct object of representing the country as a whole, and of recording only such information as may be of general service, all correspondence of a personal nature will find no place in its pages. Argument, and the statement of individual criticisms and grievances form no part of the plan on which it is proposed to conduct the Sarawak Gazette.¹⁰

¹⁰ Ibid., No. 1 (August 26, 1870) n.p.

It was in the first instance to be a means of promulgating the Rajah's orders and publishing reports, especially for the benefit of outstation officers. In 1870, however, there was precious little official matter to publish, and the first few issues devoted much of their space to accounts of the Franco-Prussian War and other bits of intelligence from Europe.¹¹ This may have led Sir Steven Runciman to conclude that "the Sarawak Gazette was first intended mainly to give citizens of Kuching the news from the outside world."¹² It was published "as soon as possible" after the arrival of the fortnightly mail steamer. If it was not already known it soon became evident that the mail steamer which brought ¹¹The paucity of official matter in the early issues of the Sarawak Gazette may have been because the Rajah did not make this material available to the editor for publication. The first published outstation reports were from Lundu and Mukah. They were addressed to the editor and published in Ibid., No. 4 (October 15, 1870) n.p. There is also mentioned in Ibid., No. 9 (January 9, 1871) n.p., a November, 1870 "report of the resident of the Rejang," which was never published. Presumably, this was the official monthly report addressed to the Rajah. For evidence that editor Kemp considered European news to be "filler" see the leading article, Ibid., No. 54 (December 18, 1872) n.p.

¹²Runciman, op. cit., p. 166.

the Reuter's dispatches, which were received in Singapore via the newly laid submarine cable, carried also the Singapore newspapers which contained these same dispatches.

Only five issues were published before a correspondent suggested its "primary object" should be "to furnish all possible information regarding the country."¹³ Editor Kemp concurred without reservation, and rearranged the paper's format so that the official material, of interest chiefly to "residents at the outstations," would be in a separate section. The remainder of the paper was to concern itself with intelligence about Sarawak. "Reuter's telegrams" soon disappeared as a regular feature.

A formal restatement of purpose the following year showed that the "second object," that of serving as "a recognized report" of Sarawak, had become the more important.

It was meant chiefly to give friends at home clear and truthful accounts of the country. Its other object viz., to circulate the most interesting scraps of European news was entirely a secondary one, this being done at most outstations by other papers. To chronicle our doings, and to describe the country and its capabilities is the main object the Gazette has in view.¹⁴

Although at least three subsequent editors, touched indirectly the subject of the Sarawak Gazette's purpose, ¹³Sarawak Gazette, No. 6 (November 18, 1870) n.p.

¹⁴Ibid., No. 28 (October 31, 1871) n.p.

more than nine decades were to pass before another explicit statement appeared.¹⁵ "Its prime function is to keep civil servants, leaders of all sorts, and alert citizens in the picture, and to provide for the permanent record, some account of Sarawak from month to month and year to year."¹⁶ In the 1960s it was no longer necessary to look beyond Sarawak's borders for a readership of consequence. Little else had changed.

Censorship and control.

A free editorial policy is not easily maintained by a government organ, for conflicting interests are bound to arise. An unknown author penning the Sarawak Gazette's somewhat premature obituary following Reverend Kemp's departure for Ceylon in July, 1873, spoke of it in retrospect as "a free newspaper, the Government organ, and official so far as being the means of publication of all notifications by authority."¹⁷ And so approximately it was, but not without a struggle on the part of the Rajah and the editor to resolve this apparent contradiction.

¹⁵The three editors were John Beville Archer, Nigel Hughes and Robert Nicholl. See Ibid., No. 827 (August 1, 1922) p. 191; No. 836 (May 1, 1923) p. 121; No. 906 (March 1, 1929) p. 36; No. 911 (August 1, 1929) p. 124; No. 1000 (January 4, 1937) supplement, p. ix; No. 1062 (September 2, 1946) pp. 1-2 and No. 1230 (August 31, 1960) p. 172.

The Rajah's reorganization of the courts in November, 1870 was reported in the Sarawak Gazette with editorial comment. Nettled by the editor's statements, the Rajah replied in the next issue.

I must confess I was rather surprised to see in the last number of the paper some criticism on the alteration in the regulation of our Courts. As the paper is printed by the Government press, I think it a little out of place, as if the journal commences to criticise political matters it will not in all probability confine its remarks solely to Sarawak politics, and, in that case, the Head of the Government most undoubtedly would be held responsible for its opinions, and if once a commencement is made on this path, where is it likely to end?¹⁸

It was left for John Kemp's successor, "a gentlemen of no small literary attainments," to explore the possibility of disagreeing with non-political aspects of government policy.¹⁹

¹⁷Ibid., No. 69, op. cit., n.p. The selection of the term gazette, which can mean either a newspaper or an official journal, reflects, perhaps unintentionally, this imprecision.

¹⁸Ibid., No. 8 (December 17, 1870) n.p.

¹⁹The second editor's name has not survived. His editorship commenced in March, 1874 and lasted well into 1875, although probably not past December of that year. See Ibid., No. 70 (October 17, 1873) n.p.; No. 73 (February 2, 1874) n.p. and No. 94 (January 16, 1875) n.p. A partial list of Sarawak Gazette editors appears in No. 1000, op. cit., p. xi.

He chose to question the wisdom of the Committee of Administration in postponing the celebrations on the occasion of the Rajah's birthday, June 3, until after the Rajah's return from England some two weeks later.²⁰ A stinging rebuke from Major Rodway, the Committee of Administration's presiding officer, showed this approach to be singularly unrewarding.²¹

With the possible exception of Malcolm Drummond, who edited the Sarawak Gazette in 1881, succeeding editors during the remainder of the second Rajah's reign were not recruited abroad for their literary skills.²² On the contrary, they were career officers serving in a variety of administrative capacities, who were directed to undertake the editorship as a part-time duty. Editorial experimentation was not again at issue.²³

²⁰Ibid., No. 102 (May 29, 1875) n.p.

²¹Ibid., No. 103 (June 16, 1875) n.p.

²²Malcolm Drummond is not included in the partial list of editors published in No. 1000, op. cit., p. xi. Information relating to his editorship may be found in Ibid., No. 172 (February 1, 1881) p. 15; No. 176 (June 1, 1881) p. 45 and No. 1003 (April 1, 1937) p. 97.

²³Editor Robert Nicholl has called attention to the fact that "for long periods the Government Printers were editors." Although this has not been the practice since December, 1924, it does raise a question of whether editors were appointed primarily for their editorial ability or for their aptitude for running the Government Printing Office. See No. 1000, op. cit., p. xii; Ibid., No. 1066 (January 2, 1947) p. 12 and No. 1230 op. cit., p. 171.

Apparently, the second Rajah did not censor the Sarawak Gazette, but preferred instead to publish corrections in a later issue.²⁴ During the third Rajah's reign, however, copy was censored by the chief secretary prior to its publication.²⁵ Censorship was reinstated by the colonial administration when the Sarawak Gazette was "resurrected" in 1946.²⁶ Examining the few instances in which censorship was mentioned, one concludes that the pressure of the censor's blue pencil was never oppressive. By the time Tom Harrisson assumed the co-editorship in 1964, he was able to state:

It is a government publication. But by very long tradition it is not run from above, or directed closely by high policy. Other and much more powerful channels issue the full official view. Editors of the Gazette have long been allowed a latitude in what they write themselves or print from others. That is part of the point of the publication, an unusual one in any land.²⁷

During its first ninety-five years the Sarawak Gazette has been financed variously by the Brooke government (1870 - 1941), the colonial government (1946 - 1963), ²⁴An excellent example of this, showing the tone of the Rajah's corrections, is in Ibid., No. 341 (June 1, 1894) pp. 80-81.

²⁵Ibid., No. 835 (April 3, 1923) p. 99; No. 906 (March 1, 1929) p. 34 and No. 1073 (August 1, 1947) p. 138.

the government of the Federation of Malaysia (1963 - 1964) and since January 1, 1965 by the State of Sarawak.²⁸ These shifts in financial support have not discernably affected editorial policy.

Editorial policy.

Judging from the frequency of desperate appeals by various editors for contributions, publishable copy was one of Sarawak's scarcest resources. Perhaps no single factor played as important a role in the determination of editorial policy. In substantial measure the difficulty in obtaining copy resulted from a few initial decisions, which at the time may have seemed not only innocuous, but irrelevant as well. First of all, it was decided to rely primarily upon voluntary contributions rather than systematic reporting and the routine publication of government documents. This placed a premium on exhortation rather than organization; also, being less expensive, this choice probably appealed to the Rajah. It must have appealed less to the Brooke officers who were asked to submit regularly separate reports for publication. The second decision affecting the procurement of copy was that of restricting contributions to the Sarawak Gazette to the European residents in Sarawak. "Friends at home" could not be expected to relish contributions written in Chinese or Malay.

The difficulty in obtaining copy was exacerbated by the frequency of publication. The reason to publish fortnightly no longer existed as early as 1870, after it was decided not to include Reuter's dispatches on a regular basis. However, until 1876, the editors attempted to maintain this fortnightly schedule. From 1876 until June, 1908 the Sarawak Gazette was published monthly.²⁹ In June, 1908 when the second Rajah founded the Sarawak Government Gazette, he directed the editor to resume the policy of publishing the older paper fortnightly. This policy was continued until the beginning of 1921. From 1921 until September, 1941 the Sarawak Gazette was published monthly. From September to December, 1941 a Malay section was added and the Gazette was published fortnightly. Publication was suspended during the Japanese occupation. Since World War II the Sarawak Gazette has appeared monthly.

The early issues of the Gazette were seldom more than three or four pages in length. However, the announcement in ²⁹Ibid., No. 118 (April 22, 1876) n.p. and No. 510 (June 16, 1908) p. 151. At the beginning of 1881 it was decided that the Sarawak Gazette would "appear when possible on the 1st of each month." See Ibid., No. 172 (February 1, 1881) p. 8.

April, 1876 that the "issue will be kept up monthly," contained also a promise that the paper would become thicker in order to provide "a fuller statement of occurrences."³⁰ Gradually, the Sarawak Gazette began to expand until issues of twenty, and then thirty, pages were standard.

The solution to the problem of how to obtain sufficient copy to fill an increased number of pages was to publish in extenso official reports. Implicit in this adopted solution was an admission of the failure of relying primarily upon voluntary contributions.

Of the voluntary correspondents during editor Kemp's time (1870 - 1873), Dr. E. P. Houghton, "Physician to the State," was perhaps the only one who could be counted on regularly.³¹ Several others during this period submitted excellent articles, but not with the regularity demanded by a fortnightly publication. After John Kemp's departure reports from outstation officers addressed to the Rajah were published with increasing frequency.³²

³¹See entries 2838 through 2845 in the bibliography section of this paper. See also the Sarawak Gazette, No. 11 (February 14, 1871) n.p.

³²Two of the earliest examples of the publication in the Sarawak Gazette of reports addressed to the Rajah rather than the editor are those from George Gueritz in No. 74 (March 2, 1874) n.p. and Alfred Hard Everett in No. 77 (April 29, 1874) n.p.

At the beginning of 1875 the Rajah "offered a half-yearly prize for the best written paper on Sarawak, Borneo, or the adjacent islands; or, on any one subject, such as, manners and customs of the inhabitants, their religion, social life, rites and ceremonies; or, on the natural history of the country, geological formation, history, etc."³³ If this had any effect, the Sarawak Gazette failed to record it.

Restrictions placed on the subject matter suitable for publication may have dampened the spirit of budding contributors. In the beginning the spirit was strong, perhaps immoderately so. Some of the first contributions were "personal to the point of acrimony." This prompted the editor to caution his correspondents to "make it a point to write for general information, rather than to permit their pens to be the instrument for bringing themselves prominently before the public."³⁴ Other, lingering embers may have been all but extinguished when a few issues later the Rajah declared political critique to be "a little out of place."³⁵ Unmistakably, the Rajah had placed a taboo on the publication of adverse criticism insofar as Brooke policy was concerned. Objective evaluation became a bit more difficult.

John Kemp is noted for having been a careful and conscientious editor who took pains to salvage contributions which might otherwise have been consigned to the wastepaper basket.³⁶ Unfortunately, some editors ~~summed~~ at times, unable even to reject correspondence without giving the contributor a sharp elbow in passing.

We have received a further letter on the subject of the Sarawak and Singapore Steam-ship Company, Limited. It runs to five closely written pages of foolscap and is followed by twelve signatures of which five are chops of Chinese firms. As however it is couched in somewhat intemperate language and the suggestions made in it are unbusinesslike and impracticable we refrain from publishing it.³⁷

An editor might even be provoked to use language verging on the indelicate.

We have received a letter signed "Christopher Stevenson" who writes about a matter he evidently does not understand. We do not know the writer but if he will call at the office we shall be pleased to try to convince him that his letter is rubbish.³⁸

³⁷Ibid., No. 374 (March 1, 1897) p. 52.

³⁸Ibid., No. 648 (March 16, 1914) p. 65. Another notable example is found in Ibid., No. 916 (January 2, 1930) p. 14.

Although editors no longer ridicule contributors in print, restrictions still apply. The present policy is that "contributions are accepted if signed, if of sufficient standard and local interest, and if free from political or other bias of an objectionable character."³⁹ Irritating though restrictions may at times seem, there has been, as the first editor pointed out, "an ample store of subjects, at once interesting and of use, which can be freely spoken of without getting . . . into hot water."⁴⁰

In the years following the decision to expand the paper, official reports, notices, orders, proclamations, appointments and minutes were added until they came to dominate the Sarawak Gazette; between 1905 and 1908 they came to exclude virtually all else. Editing became a routine, almost mechanical, task as the editors composed each new issue around a backbone of official material, faithfully following the organizational format of the previous issue in arranging the material.⁴¹ There were occasional windfalls, such as the journals and diaries of Hugh Brooke Low, which appeared between 1882 and 1884, or when the Rajah in 1885 ordered the editor to reprint serially Charles Grant's entire book.⁴² Nonetheless, there was a shortage of unofficial news which could be obtained with some regularity, except for the monthly Kuching chronology and the editors' short leader. The editors turned to sports, particularly the sports enjoyed by the small European community in Kuching.

It was during these years that the Sarawak Gazette came increasingly to be written for a Sarawak, especially a Kuching, audience. The "friends at home" were no longer uppermost in the minds of editors who supplemented "purely official matter" with billiard handicaps, horse-race results and long lists of recent library acquisitions.

Probably no one regretted it more than the Rajah. In 1883 he ordered each outstation officer to submit "a list of additions in Public Works, or other important items connected with his station" to be placed at the disposal of the editor as an aid in compiling the retrospective annual summary of events which was by tradition published as the leading article in the first issue of the new year.⁴³ This fairly solved the problem for every twelfth issue.

Except for the official monthly outstation reports, there was for long stretches an embarrassing absence of news and other contributions from the towns and districts outside Kuching. The remainder of the official matter and the sporting news were preponderantly Kuching-oriented. To rectify this the Rajah issued on May 9, 1894 a notice urging outstation officers to send the Sarawak Gazette "scraps of news" and "accounts" suitable for publication. In particular, he was desirous of obtaining descriptive accounts of the "habits and customs of the various tribes," which he thought would be "of great interest to readers who are not resident in Sarawak."⁴⁴ While it is not possible to assess accurately the effectiveness of this appeal by the Rajah, there was following its publication no sudden influx of contributions from the outstations.

The appearance of the Sarawak Government Gazette in 1908 put a sharp halt to the marked trend of the preceding years to load the Gazette with official reports and laws. "Purely official matter" was to be published in the Sarawak Government Gazette, and the

Sarawak Gazette was to continue but more as a newspaper, treating Sarawak news less formally. "Outstation reports, trade returns, etc., etc." were still carried in the older paper, as they were not considered to be "purely official matter."⁴⁵ Both publications were to be edited by the same person, and the editorship continued to be treated as a part-time undertaking.⁴⁶ As if this were not in itself a sufficient challenge, the Sarawak Gazette resumed fortnightly publication.⁴⁷

With the Sarawak Government Gazette, and after 1911 the Sarawak Museum Journal, siphoning off material that it might otherwise have published, the Sarawak Gazette was now a thinner paper.⁴⁸ Slowly, during the ⁴⁵No. 510, op. cit., p. 151.

⁴⁶A separate editor for the Sarawak Government Gazette was not appointed until 1928. See Ibid., No. 897 (June 1, 1928) p. 110.

⁴⁷A shipping shortage during World War I disrupted the fortnightly schedule. Newsprint stocks exhausted, the mid-February, March 1 and mid-April, 1916 issues were omitted. See Ibid., No. 694 (March 17, 1916) p. 45.

⁴⁸In addition, starting about 1900 certain of the annual reports were separately published. Curiously, no new equipment was ordered for this additional printing. A hand-operated "Harrild's Bremner" press had been purchased in 1887, and this sufficed until an electric linotype was installed in 1923. See Ibid., No. 260 (September 1, 1887) pp. 145-146; No. 827, op. cit., p. 192; No. 833 (February 1, 1923) p. 34; No. 838 (July 2, 1923) p. 192 and No. 1000 op. cit., p. xii.

next decade it grew in size, primarily as a result of the editor's knack for finding additional official reports to include. For example, attention was concentrated as never before on the systematic reporting of meteorological returns; the Kuching market price list, which is still regularly published, was started in 1913. However, the paper did become more readable without compromising its staid character. Among the contributed articles, those of William Howell and John Coney Moulton are especially deserving of mention.⁴⁹

In 1918, when Frederic George Day stepped down as editor, the editorship went to a succession of younger men who were appointed to the position for terms of one or two years.⁵⁰ Things began to change. The next few years witnessed a rush of "humourous" contributions, idle gossip concerning members of Kuching's European community and the extensive reprinting of not-too-relevant articles from abroad. This change may have reflected in part the spirit of the times, the third Rajah's apparent unconcern, the quality of censorship and the youth of the editors.⁵¹

⁴⁹The contributions by Howell and Moulton are listed by author in the bibliography section of this paper.

⁵¹The censor permitted the editor a greater latitude with respect to "fiction, descriptive and humourous articles." See No. 836, op. cit., p. 121. Inexperienced editors of no great seniority might be expected to be less effective than a more prominent individual in persuading members of the community to contribute "scraps of news" and articles.

It was thus during the third Rajah's reign (1917 - 1941) that the paper earned its sobriquet, the "Kuching Gazette."⁵² To an extent greater than had theretofore been the case, the Sarawak Gazette was written for those readers whose judgment mattered most to the editor, the European officers in Kuching and their wives.⁵³ As a consequence, the editor at times maintained a prudent silence on matters which he felt the influential segment of his readership might not care to see discussed.⁵⁴ On the obverse side of the coin, an inordinate amount of space was devoted to articles which were only remotely related to Sarawak, but which were very close to the hearts of this audience.⁵⁵ If the paper was jejune, ⁵²No. 827, op. cit., p. 191.

⁵³Trying to please all tastes in this small community was not an easy task. See No. 911, op. cit., p. 124 and Ibid., No. 925 (October 1, 1930) p. 248.

⁵⁴There are quite a number of instances of this kind of omission. For example, the Sarawak Gazette reported the circumstances surrounding the 1939 resignations by re-printing an article from the Straits Times. See Ibid., No. 1031 (August 1, 1939) pp. 124-125.

⁵⁵An excellent example of this was the coverage of the World War II news during 1939 - 1941.

probably the administrative or professional career of no editor was jeopardized as a result of his having been assigned the editorship in this period between the first and second world wars.

By and large, the post-World War II officers were a different breed of cat. They were caught up in the restless spirit of innovation which pervaded Sarawak from the mid-1940s. Compared with their predecessors, they were apt to be better educated, were drawn from more diverse backgrounds and were more willing to assume a public relations responsibility. A number of them were bursting with things to report -- things both contemporary and retrospective. By 1947 a lively correspondence had developed, and there was again a vitality in the Sarawak Gazette, which had been absent since the early 1870s.

In the years since 1946 the paper, with but few lapses, has maintained its briskness while adding polish. A number of articles by the erudite Robert Nicholl, co-editor from 1959 to 1964, are of outstanding literary merit. The most important development, however, is the ever-increasing number of non-European contributors. With the development of universal literacy among all communities in Sarawak, this most certainly offers the ultimate solution to the problem of obtaining copy.

The quality of the articles and reports makes the Sarawak Gazette an especially valuable source. So far as is known, false information was never deliberately printed. The small number of typographical errors and the faithfulness with which corrections were published testifies to the editors' passion for accuracy. The problem of evaluating possible bias and omission in any given article or report must be left to the individual.

II. A NOTE ON THE USE OF THE GUIDE

Articles and reports considered useful to the student of Sarawak and neighboring areas are listed from the first issue of the Gazette in 1870 through January 1966. The outstation reports have not been included in this listing.

Each entry is numbered and listed alphabetically by author. The author's name in brackets indicates that the identity of the author has been supplied by the compiler. Until recently editors were in many cases reluctant to identify the author, preferring instead to note that the article was "contributed," or alternatively, to show the author to be some undesignated person hiding behind such pseudonyms as "Fair play," "One who cares for the Dyaks" and "Peter Piltdown." Often authorship was designated by a set of initials, such as "X.Y.Z." Unidentified initials and pseudonyms have been placed following the pagination in the entry.

The title of the article or report enclosed in quotation marks follows the name of the author in all author entries. Since headlines or titles were not always used, especially during the early years of publication, it has often been necessary to supply the title; such titles are enclosed in brackets. Entries of unknown authorship commence with and are alphabetically listed by their title.

Volume numbers, which change each January, started with volume seven in 1877. Issue numbers, on the other hand, are consecutive from the first issue, making it unnecessary to cite the volume number in the bibliographic entry. The issue number is followed by the date of publication, parenthetically enclosed, and the pagination.

The first 118 issues of the Sarawak Gazette were not paginated. Starting with the May 20, 1876 issue, and for the remainder of that year, each number was paginated independently. Pagination by volume, or continuous annual pagination, dates from number 127, January 16, 1877.

Individual entries are selectively annotated. Annotations serve to clarify, to make explicit, or to provide a frame of reference for an ambiguous or cryptic title. They are also used for cross references.

The laws of Sarawak are treated in a separate section of this guide. In the Sarawak Gazette they were divided approximately, and perhaps a trifle indiscriminately, among notices, orders, and proclamations, and with increasing frequency were published in the Sarawak Gazette until June, 1908. After that time they were published in the Sarawak Government Gazette.

Until the mid-1920s no attempt was made to codify the laws of Sarawak; the codification at that time included only those laws still in effect. Laws no longer in effect at that time are to be found only in the Sarawak Gazette, the Sarawak Government Gazette and the "order books" in the Sarawak Museum archives.

During the reign of the second Rajah there was apparently no legal distinction among notices, orders and proclamations, and practical distinctions, if any, were blurred.

Notices appeared in the Sarawak Gazette under the following headings: advertisement, by authority, dog notice, government notice, government notification, notice, notice to mariners, notification, postal notice, postal official notice, Post Office notice, regulation, Sarawak government notification and supplementary notice.¹ Occasionally, notices were published without heading. Most of the notices included in this compilation were issued over the signature of the Rajah. In the absence of the Rajah they were issued by the Committee of Administration. A number of notices, however, were issued by senior administrative officers. In 1875 and 1877, there were abortive attempts to number the notices published in the Sarawak Gazette, but the systematic numbering of the published notices did not commence until 1893.

¹By no means can all notices be construed to be Brooke law, and a number of "public notices" have been included in this compilation. Notices have been selected primarily for the generality of their application. Notices of narrower application, such as probate notices and notices referring to the disposition of individual parcels of real estate or chattel, have been omitted.

Orders were published either without a rubric or under any of the following headings: by order, general order, order and order in council. Orders, besides being called orders, were in the text of the law variously referred to as enactments, laws, notices, orders in council, orders in Supreme Council, ordinances, regulations, rules, stamp ordinances and standing orders. As was the case with notices, the numbering of orders published in the Sarawak Gazette commenced in 1893, although there is some evidence that in the "order book" orders were numbered from at least 1886.² It is not known whether the order number in the Sarawak Gazette matches that in the order book: in several cases the "effect clause" is apparently erroneous.

²Reference is made to Order No. VII of 1886 in No. 369 (October 1, 1896) p. 191. The order books are mentioned in Order No. XXII of 1899, No. 405 (October 2, 1899) p. 294. Prior to 1893 notices and orders were usually referred to by their date of promulgation, and even after being numbered in the Sarawak Gazette, this practice continued with declining frequency until well into this century.

Proclamations published in the Sarawak Gazette invariably appeared under that heading. Each is unnumbered and referred to only by its date.

Notices, orders and proclamations were seldom published with a title. Descriptive titles or brief statements of content have been supplied by the compiler. The few published titles have been enclosed in quotation marks. Where the effect of the law is explicitly mentioned in an "effect clause" or elsewhere in the text, this has been noted in the entry's annotation. Each entry includes also the effective date and the date of promulgation of the law. They are listed chronologically.

Laws were from time to time also published in the "minutes" of the Supreme Council and the Committee of Administration, and entries under these two headings in the bibliography section of this guide should be consulted.

In some sources Sarawak Gazette articles are cited by the volume and page, or by the issue number and the page. A conversion table has been appended to this guide in order readily to provide complete bibliographic data for any such citation.

The final section contains a subject index, which is the key to the use of this guide. This system of indexing facilitates multiple referencing, which would be difficult if the bibliographic entries themselves were listed under subject headings.

A separate compilation of Sarawak outstation reports with its own index is in process of compilation.

It is hoped that this guide and the forthcoming Guide to Sarawak outstation reports will facilitate the use of the Sarawak Gazette, which is perhaps the richest single source of materials relating to Sarawak.
